- ii. For the purpose of our assignment, we have relied on such data summarized above and other related information and explanations provided to us in this regard.

5. Base of value and premise of value

Valuation Bases (Standards of Value): Standards of Value means the indication of type of value being used in a specific valuation exercise. For the purpose of this valuation, the standard of value for the share valuation has been taken as fair value of shares.

Valuation premise: Determining the business value depends upon the situation in which the business is valued, i.e., what is likely to happen to business affects the value of business today. For the purpose of this valuation, the standard of value for the share valuation has been arrived on the basis ‘going concern’ premise, as this venture is going concern for a foreseeable future.

6. Approach to valuation.

1. Valuation Methodology:

Based on Valuation Standards Issued by ICAI, there are three methods for estimating the value of an asset (tangible or intangible). These include:

- The Cost Approach
- The Market Approach
- The Income Approach

In case a need arises, in addition, valuers may utilize a hybrid methodology that combines more than one of the above methods.

2. Valuation Strategies:

To establish an estimated fair market value for Electronica Finance Limited, we reviewed each methodology available for the valuation, and then weighted each approach based on the perceived reliability of inputs and assumptions used in each valuation.

Use of Asset or Cost Approach

The asset or cost method estimates the fair market value of a business by modifying the asset and liability balances on their balance sheet to the company's corresponding fair market value. This method is usually derived by first adding up the individual values of a company's primary assets. The fair market value is then defined as the total of the company's assets minus the total of their corresponding liabilities.

As a practical matter, the net/underlying asset method has numerous variations. By inherently assuming the company will continue to operate in the foreseeable future, this method utilizes a replacement cost model as a reasonable measure of value. The method operates under the basic assertion that the value of a business should be consistent with the replacement cost of the company's assets.

Our Opinion

This valuation approach is mainly used in case where the firm is to be liquidated i.e., it does not meet the "going concern criteria" or in case where the asset base exceeds earning capability.

The company is meeting the "Going concern" criteria and current earning capacity is greater than the asset base. Hence, the asset or cost method is not considered appropriate.

Use of Market Method

The market method to business valuation is historically rooted in the economics principles of competition that suggests that in a free market, buyers will not pay more for a business, and the sellers will not accept less, than the price of a comparable business enterprise. It is similar, in many respects, to "comparable sales" method that is commonly utilized in real estate appraisals. In the business valuation arena, the market price of the stocks of publicly traded companies engaged in the same or similar line of business, whose shares are actively traded in a free and open market, can be used as a valid indicator of value when the transactions in which stocks are traded are sufficiently similar, to permit meaningful comparison.

Likewise, indicators of value based on specific financial variables can also be extracted from comparable companies. Using these parameters, appropriate valuation multiples can then be developed and applied to reflect significant differences and divergent levels of risk in contrast to the compared companies. The valuation process is also subject to the specific source of analysed data. For example, if the multiples applied, are generated from actively traded public companies, the resultant value is defined as a marketable, non-controlling interest value. On the other hand, if the multiples are produced from transactional data, the resulting value is defined as a controlling interest value. The resulting multiples are then applied to the relevant financial metrics of the subject company under the guideline public company and guideline transaction methods.

Our Opinion

EFL is a company which is into the business of Financing to various sectors including machine financing, working capital financing and renewable energy financing. In our opinion, there is no comparable company which is listed on recognized stock exchange in India. In absence of data, we conclude that market method is not appropriate for valuation of the company.

Use of Income Method

The income method of business valuation is an estimate of the present value of the estimated future monetary benefits to the company. Consequently, this method requires a projection of cash flows that the business is expected to produce.

Using the discounted cash flow method("DCF"), these cash flows are subsequently converted to their present value using a specific discount rate that factors in the time value of money and any measurable level of risks associated with the business. Lastly, depending upon the actual adjustments that are made to the projected cash flows, the resultant interest value may represent either a controlling value or a non-controlling value.

Our Opinion

The management of EFL has conducted a market study and has provided us with both targeted/ projected revenue, costs and resultant balance sheets for the years ending March 31, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029. Based on availability of projections, we have identified Discounted Cashflow as an appropriate method to estimate the fair market value of the company.

Conclusion:

Among the above-mentioned valuation methodologies viz. Income approach, Market approach, and Cost approach, Income method has been adopted for the purpose valuation of equity shares and CCPS. The Income approach assesses the future cash generating potential of the asset or business and we conclude that the Income method of valuation is an appropriate method for valuation of equity shares and CCPS of the company.

7. Valuation Summary:

The Valuation of EFL as on March 31, 2024, is INR 346.55 per share as summarized below:

Particulars	INR
Total Equity Value as on March 31, 2024	10,10,28,44,829

Fair value of Equity Share as on March 31, 2024	346.55

Please refer Annexure 1 for the detailed working.

8. Work methodology and approach of valuation of shares:

Income Method:

DCF method values a business based upon the available cash flow a prudent investor would expect the subject business to generate over a given period of time. This method is used to determine the present value of a business on a going concern assumption and recognizes the time value of money by discounting the free cash flows for the explicit forecast period and the perpetuity value at an appropriate discount factor. Free cash flows are the cash flows expected to be generated by the company that are available to equity shareholders of the company. The terminal value represents the total value of the available cash flow for all periods subsequent to the forecast period. The terminal value of the business at the end of the forecast period is estimated and discounted to its equivalent present value and added to the present value of the explicit forecast period cash flow to estimate the value of the business.

- a. Future cash flows: Free cash flows are the cash flows expected to be generated by the firm/company that are available to the company.
- b. Discount rate applied being weighted average cost of capital: This discount rate, which is applied to the free cash flows, should reflect the opportunity cost to the contributors of long-term capital. The opportunity cost of long-term capital providers equals the rate of return the capital provider expects to earn on other investments of equivalent risk.
- c. Perpetuity cash flow (terminal value): The terminal value refers to the present value of the business as a going concern beyond the period of projections up to infinity. This value is estimated considering expected growth rates of the business in future, sustainable capital investments required for the business as well as the estimated growth rate of the industry and economy.
